

HR MEMO — CONFIDENTIAL DRAFT

CloudZilla Internal Archive — Recovered Fragment

Integrity Status: PARTIALLY CORRUPTED

People gathered in the cafeteria earlier than usual that morning.

One employee complained about their drink tasting strange during the break.

Investigators initially ignored the report, assuming it was workplace stress.

Several arguments about lunch labels were recorded in internal chat logs.

Office rumors spread quickly after the CEO's unexpected meeting ended.

No one realized the importance of a simple mug sitting quietly on the table.

Emails revealed growing resentment toward management decisions and policies.

Daily routines masked deeper frustrations building among the staff.

Coffee breaks became tense conversations instead of moments of relaxation.

One note mentioned someone switching cups accidentally during cleanup.

Food safety warnings were issued but soon forgotten by everyone involved.

Fight your inner demons to get to the other end.

Employees laughed it off, believing nothing serious could happen.

End of the page contains a whitewashed trail left by the murderer.

Monitoring teams later revisited the cafeteria footage for anomalies.

Under dim lights, a figure briefly approached the counter and paused.

Grainy frames showed a hand near a cup before leaving the area silently.
